"The amber glass lamp is a '70s period piece, which we found at a flea market in town."

"We picked these curtains for their '60s mod pattern and hip feel."

"The photo is of Portofino, Italy; we thought it worked since Brooke's family is worldly."

"We envision the leopard pillow came from Brooke's bedroom at her parents' house."

"From a local specialty shop; we thought it was Brooke because it's feminine and frilly."

"It's big and romantic and has a real '30s or '40s feel."

One Tree Hill's Brooke Davis is living the ultimate teen fantasy. She's beautiful, she's head cheerleader, and she has a really cute boyfriend. She even has her own fabulous bachelorette pad, 3000 miles from the watchful eyes of her parents. When the rest of Brooke's family moved to L.A. at the end of last season, the high school vixen remained behind in the fictional town of Tree Hill, North Carolina, inheriting an apartment from divorcing friends Haley and Nathan, and refurbishing it in her own femme fatale-ish style. And for Brooke, as well as for the show's set decorator, James Ferrell, that meant satisfying a taste for decadent girlish frills on a decidedly no-frills budget. "Brooke is sort of a hot mama, so to speak, a real boy-chaser," James explains. "So when she moved in, we made the place much more... voluptuous."

Bubby Brooke revamped and vamped up her new living room by splashing it with purple, teal, turquoise and gold—colors the decorator says "reflect her sexy personality." And although the curvy, early 20th-century creations of French designer Jean Royère

'Budget bordello,' anyone? On One Tree Hill, an apartment made for seduction came together on the cheap

"For a romantic feel, the pale pink and lavender draperies can be drawn all around the bed."

"We knew this looks like a bordello red. I'm not saying Brooke is a lady of the evening, but we want people to note her sexiness."

"Our producer specifically asked for a round bed. It even has a secret drawer on the side where Brooke keeps her letters."

"I tried to incorporate a few Southern or Tarheel touches, like these sandals [on Brooke's bedroom wall]."

"We got the tile at a gallery in town; the moonlit couple fit our romantic theme."

served as his prime inspiration for furniture, Ferrell also tweaked certain pieces to add that "late '60s/early '70s, American-retro feel" that show creator-producer Mark Schwahn had requested. To set the seductive mood for Brooke's oft-visited bedroom, the crew applied a complex rag-painting technique to the walls, creating a bordello-style orange-red, and designed a round, romantic bed. "We had round-sheets made, Ferrell notes, "but we used a square comforter; we didn't want 'designer-perfect.'" Even for native North Carolinian Ferrell, filming on location in Wilmington, North Carolina has one small drawback: The lack of nearby prop houses means frequent trips for the show's production team to cities as far away as Richmond, Virginia and Washington, D.C. Then again, says Ferrell, Brooke would love all the stylish shopping, "and I just have to get into that mind-set of a teenage girl, where I can go out and say, 'Brooke would like that.' For an older guy, it can be challenging, but it's always fun." ●

Go Bold In terms of color, opt for saturated shades, and start by painting your walls. Red- or orange-based hues are thought by color therapists to intensify emotions and evoke feelings of passion. For pure deco-drama, opt for a solid-colored wall, or soften the effect a bit with a sponging or ragging technique for a look similar to that of Brooke's bedroom.

Creating a sexy-but-chic bedroom like Brooke's comes down to understanding texture, color and the art of restraint, says Carter

Go soft Velvet drapes, throws, pillows and more in rich shades or animal prints immediately up a room's seductiveness ante. And propping mirrors at unexpected angles next to groupings of lit candles will also do wonders in terms of mood-heightening. Note, too, that an oscillating fan will spread incense or oil scents while preventing them from getting overpowering.

Don't go crazy While indoor fountains, fireplaces or Jacuzzis can make a room feel romantic, remember that less can be more. Incorporate elements that make you feel sexy, rather than simply embracing the stereotypical. If you're not "feeling" a red wall, use red as an accent color. And keep mirrors confined to furniture and walls, rather than hanging them from the ceiling.
